SUMMARY:

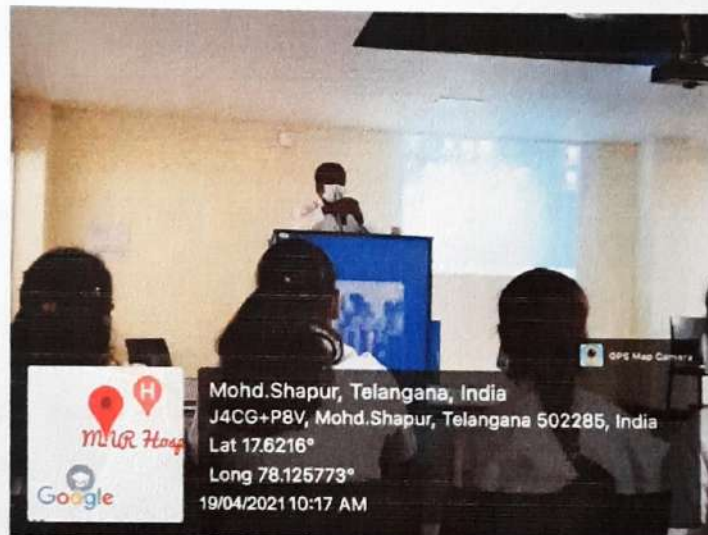

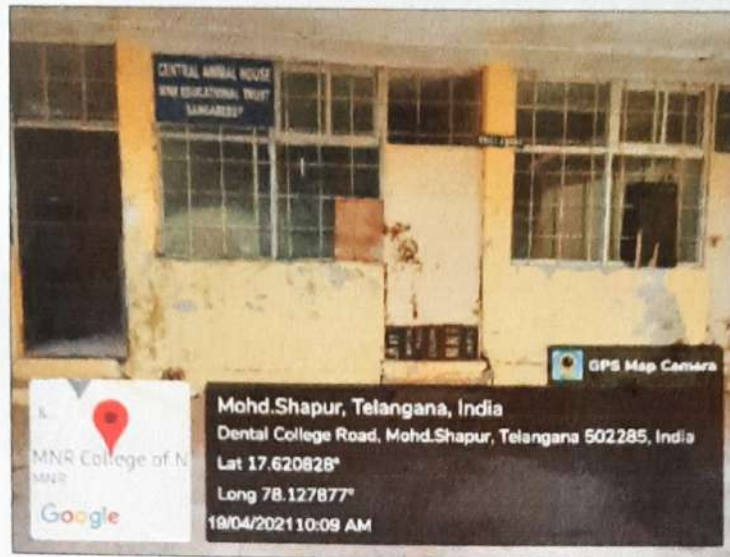

MNR Dental College has an established animal house for teaching, training and research activities for students. The facility is CPCSEA approved with animal area, quarantine sections, store rooms. The students were exposed to animals species maintained under hygienic and controlled environmental conditions. The application of animal studies in various fields of dentistry like dental material effects, periodontal disease, implant, bone reconstruction, distraction osteogenesis and advanced surgical experiments were discussed. Students learnt the need for translational research in animals prior to human studies.

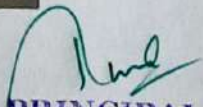

Conclusion: The program gave an understanding of animal ethics and students gained an insight on the application of animal models in dentistry.
